

The Weagle Worker Mission

My name is Amy Bruce, a student and temporary employment services specialist. You are now taking an orientation training for on-campus student employment, better known as “Weagle Workers.”

The mission of the Student Employment Office, a unit of Auburn University Human Resources (HR), is dedicated to supporting and improving all phases of the on-campus student employment lifecycle for student employees, faculty, and staff by establishing standardized practices and procedures, developing resources for guidance, and enforcing compliance with university policies and state and federal regulations.

Aligning with the university’s mission responsibility to “educate our students and prepare them for life”, student employment is a valuable part of the overall student experience. The knowledge, skills, and abilities honed and developed through employment are necessary components of the student’s journey to personal and professional growth. Thereby, we believe that the student’s on-campus employment experience should accurately reflect the fundamental realities of future employment beyond Auburn University.

We are so pleased that you are interested in Weagle Workers and we hope that this training will help prepare you for this new adventure. If you have any questions, please contact us at weagleworkers@auburn.edu or visit our website at aub.ie/weagleworkers.
