

Haruka Wada received her PhD at University of Texas at Austin in 2007. She joined the Department of Biological Sciences at Auburn University in 2012. Her laboratory examines how organisms respond to changing environment and when and why an environmental stressor becomes detrimental. Her research program takes an integrated approach to understanding how an animal's developmental trajectory and physiological traits are shaped by maternal cues, toxicological, and temperature stress.