John Wagnon "Ladies of Camellias" 48" x 36"

GALLERY ONE INC

Fine Art

"Thriving in the 'New Normal.' Maximizing Your Philanthropic Sootprint"

Through its educational programs and philanthropic endeavors, the College of Human Sciences Women's Philanthropy Board (WPB) strives to empower women with information that will help them face the varied situations they encounter in life. WPB was launched in the spring of 2002. Its mission includes enabling women to: develop their full leadership potential; achieve independence as financial donors and decision-makers; serve as mentors for future generations of philanthropists; and broaden the base of financial support for the College of Human Sciences.

Starting with a 25 member core of professional and civic leaders, the WPB has grown in size and stature during its short eight-year history. The current WPB roster includes roughly 150 members, approximately 500 College of Human Sciences students who affiliated with the board as WPB mentees, and nine corporate partners.

The Women's Philanthropy Board is currently pursuing its year-long theme entitled, "Thriving in the 'New Normal:' Maximizing your Philanthropic Footprint." WPB's educational programs, roundtables, and other networking opportunities are designed to prepare women to make sound decisions that will have a positive impact on their financial and philanthropic lives. The highlight event of the WPB program year is a Spring Symposium. The 2010 Spring Symposium will feature Knight Kiplinger, Editor in Chief, Kiplinger's Personal Finance Magazine, Kiplinger.com and The Kiplinger Letter. Examples of featured speakers in past years include: Alabama's First Lady Patsy Riley, NBC financial consultant Jean Chatzky, noted columnist Jane Bryant Quinn, professional golfer Nancy Lopez, Founder of Chick-fil-A, Truett Cathy, Alabama State Treasurer Kay Ivey, and President and CEO, Gulf Power, Susan Story. An equally exciting achievement for WPB is the contribution of over $280,000 in scholarships and awards over the past eight years to students and faculty in the College of Human Sciences.

For more information on becoming a member of WPB, contact Sidney James-Nakhjavan at 334-844-3524, wpbchs1@auburn.edu or visit the WPB website at www.humsci.auburn.edu/wpb. Visit us on Facebook and Twitter and see WPB videos at www.youtube.com.

"Thriving in the 'New Normal.' Maximizing Your Philanthropic Sootprint"

Through its educational programs and philanthropic endeavors, the College of Human Sciences Women's Philanthropy Board (WPB) strives to empower women with information that will help them face the varied situations they encounter in life. WPB was launched in the spring of 2002. Its mission includes enabling women to: develop their full leadership potential; achieve independence as financial donors and decision-makers; serve as mentors for future generations of philanthropists; and broaden the base of financial support for the College of Human Sciences.

Starting with a 25 member core of professional and civic leaders, the WPB has grown in size and stature during its short eight-year history. The current WPB roster includes roughly 150 members, approximately 500 College of Human Sciences students who affiliated with the board as WPB mentees, and nine corporate partners.

The Women's Philanthropy Board is currently pursuing its year-long theme entitled, "Thriving in the 'New Normal:' Maximizing your Philanthropic Footprint." WPB's educational programs, roundtables, and other networking opportunities are designed to prepare women to make sound decisions that will have a positive impact on their financial and philanthropic lives. The highlight event of the WPB program year is a Spring Symposium. The 2010 Spring Symposium will feature Knight Kiplinger, Editor in Chief, Kiplinger's Personal Finance Magazine, Kiplinger.com and The Kiplinger Letter. Examples of featured speakers in past years include: Alabama's First Lady Patsy Riley, NBC financial consultant Jean Chatzky, noted columnist Jane Bryant Quinn, professional golfer Nancy Lopez, Founder of Chick-fil-A, Truett Cathy, Alabama State Treasurer Kay Ivey, and President and CEO, Gulf Power, Susan Story. An equally exciting achievement for WPB is the contribution of over $280,000 in scholarships and awards over the past eight years to students and faculty in the College of Human Sciences.

For more information on becoming a member of WPB, contact Sidney James-Nakhjavan at 334-844-3524, wpbchs1@auburn.edu or visit the WPB website at www.humsci.auburn.edu/wpb. Visit us on Facebook and Twitter and see WPB videos at www.youtube.com.

WRS Corporate Rartners

The Women's Philanthropy Board acknowledges with gratitude the following WPB Corporate Partners who have graciously made commitments to support 2009-2010 WPB initiatives. WPB Corporate Partners provide donations which support the board's educational and philanthropic activities.

WRS Corporate Rartners

The Women's Philanthropy Board acknowledges with gratitude the following WPB Corporate Partners who have graciously made commitments to support 2009-2010 WPB initiatives. WPB Corporate Partners provide donations which support the board's educational and philanthropic activities.

