RACHEL SUMEKH, she/her

Rachel Sumekh is a strategist and social impact consultant. For 10 years, she served as the CEO and Founder of Swipe Out Hunger. The organization is the leading nonprofit in addressing hunger amongst college students. Swipe Out Hunger has been recognized by The Obama White House and landed Rachel on the Forbes' 30 Under 30 list.

Swipe Out Hunger began in 2010 with a few friends at UCLA. Since, its network has grown to over 750 universities, serving millions of nourishing meals. The organization's innovative approach allows university students to donate unused funds from their meal plans to food insecure peers. In 2021, Swipe merged with the College and University Food Bank Alliance (CUFBA) becoming the home for the food pantry movement. Rachel wrote the Hunger Free Campus Act which the state of California passed and has since sent $100+ million to anti-hunger programs on campus.

Rachel serves on the board of the Los Angeles Community College Foundation and is a graduate of UCLA. Rachel is the proud daughter of Iranian Jewish immigrants.

SUNNY BAKER, she/her

For over 14 years, Sunny has worked to lead school food reform and create a new culture of regionally-based eating. She is currently the Senior Director of Programs and Policy at the National Farm to School Network, an organization with a vision of a strong and just food system for all, seeking deep transformation toward this vision through farm to school.

Originally from St. Louis, Sunny grew up with a deep appreciation for the natural world and a strong desire to make a positive impact on her community, values shaped by her Jewish identity. One of Sunny's most notable accomplishments was her work growing the farm to school movement in Mississippi, featured at TedXManhattan in 2014. She established Good Food for Oxford Schools and co-founded the Mississippi Farm to School Network during her decade in the state.

Sunny's career has led her to make meaningful connections between food systems and food justice work, which she sees as a crucial component of racial and economic justice. She believes every child has a right to nourishing, culturally appropriate food at school, regardless of their income, race, or geographic location. She is a frequent speaker at conferences and events, where she shares her expertise on topics such as food sovereignty and the future of school food.

A graduate of Hendrix College, Sunny is now located in Little Rock, AR, where she spends her free time practicing yoga, baking challah for Shabbat dinners, and taking forest walks with her two daughters.

OZARK 1

BUILDING A STUDENT MOVEMENT

From developing a clear mission and goals for your organization to building a sustainable student group structure, learn best practices of how to build something to last. This interactive workshop will focus on how to embody values-driven leadership and advance your work while fostering essential team relationships.

Rachel Sumekh
Entrepreneur and Activist

OZARK 2

ASSESSING FOOD INSECURITY & COMMUNITY NEEDS

Having spent the last decade focusing on how best to assess both the short and long-term consequences of food and nutritional insecurity, the workshop is designed to introduce students to practical approaches to needs assessment at the community level. Several strategies, both qualitative and quantitative, will be presented and students will be provided with some practical first steps to assessing the challenges and needs in their local food systems.

Dr. Kevin M. Fitzpatrick
University Professor & Jones Chair in Community
Department of Sociology and Criminology, University of Arkansas

SALON A

FARMERS AREN'T THE ENEMY: WORKING WITH FARMERS TO FACILITATE FOOD SECURITY

This session addresses how to meaningfully bring farmers in the conversation around the future of food security and ecological systems management. In the search to find what's possible a divide has emerged between policy makers, public opinion, and what happens on farms. By highlighting how these divides occur, and ways to mediate between the stakeholders, participants will develop a better understanding of not only the challenges and needs farmers have, but also the potential farms have for providing solutions.

Jared Phillips
Farmer, Historian

SALON B

BUILDING COMMUNITIES OF PRACTICE TO CULTIVATE NEW STRATEGIES FOR ADDRESSING FOOD INSECURITY

Community-based organizations (CBOs) working to address food insecurity often work with limited capacity and funding, compete with fellow CBOs for resources, and operate in a scarcity framework. In this workshop, the presenters will outline the development and work of the Northwest Arkansas Food Insecurity Community of Practice (NWA FI CofP) who implemented three pilot projects over the past three years. The NWA FI CofP was made up of 23 CBOs, local advisors who have experienced food insecurity, and a national advisory board, all working to improve equitable access to healthier foods. The presenters will then facilitate small group discussion on relationships with community-based organizations and problem solve ways attendees can lean on community networks to accomplish their goals.
