Administrative Leadership Accomplishments

Interim Vice President for Research

- Auburn University Health Sciences Research Initiative
 - Currently engaged in identifying areas where Auburn can lead and have impact. Ongoing efforts address developing and enhancing internal and external partnerships, increasing and diversifying external sponsorships, and growing the national visibility of Auburn in the health sciences arena.
 - Appointed a faculty liaison to the AUHSRI steering committee and expanded the committee to include a diversity of key stakeholders.
 - Facilitated the hiring of an external health sciences consultant (fall 2018) to help assess current capacity, determine directions for growth, and make recommendations for the goals, leadership, supporting infrastructure, and strategic planning for the AUHSRI. The consultant submitted a midterm report December 2018. Consulting activities continue into spring 2019 with an anticipated final report by April 1, 2019.
- Electronic Research Administration (eRA)
 - The Office of the Vice President for Research (OVPR) in collaboration with the Chief Information Officer worked with consultants from IBM to engage an assessment of Auburn University's research administration and compliance processes. The IBM report is being used to improve documents and processes needed to support the adoption of an eRA system.
 - Currently working with the IBM consultants on a follow up phase aimed at developing a vision for an eRA "end state" and a journey map. In addition, eRA vendor demonstrations are occurring December 2018 - February 2019.
- Improving Research Administration
 - The OVPR implemented a faculty-wide survey and listening sessions to prioritize areas in need of improvement.
 - Problem solving meetings convened with stakeholders are informing changes to policy and practice. Examples include revisions to research participant incentive pay policy, tuition waivers as cost share practices, and improvement in processes/communication among research compliance and the academic units.

- A facilitated solutions team (composed of representation from academic units, central business offices, and OVPR) is now available to convene and moderate productive problem solving processes.
 - Filled needed management positions for compliance that are essential for supporting current and growing research capacity at Auburn.
 - PI Eligibility: In coordination with the Faculty Research Committee (FRC) and Associate Deans for Research (ADRs), revised the PI eligibility guidelines – posted November 15, 2018
 - Incentivizing Scholarship Plan: Collaborated with FRC chair and Associate Provost to develop guidelines for a new plan for incentivizing scholarship. An initial draft of the guidelines was reviewed by the Provost, FRC, ADRs, and academic unit leadership. A revised draft that incorporates input from the stakeholders is now under review with the Provost.
4. Supporting Interdisciplinary Team Research
- Currently engaged in facilitation of the 11 teams that received the Presidential Awards for Interdisciplinary Research (PAIR) grants by providing additional services from the Office of Proposal Services and Faculty Support. Additionally, the PAIR teams will be highlighted in the 2019 Auburn University research magazine, as will Auburn's recent attainment (December 2018) of the R1 Carnegie classification.
 - Added an interdisciplinary team category to the Intramural Grant Program competition; 95 applications were received. Decisions for funding will occur March 2019.
 - Scheduled strategic research cluster team updates to be presented at the 2018-2019 University Research Council meetings. In addition, data are being compiled on the productivity of the cluster members.
 - Visibility and networking opportunities were provided during the 2018 Faculty Research Symposium and Creative Scholarship Showcase events.
5. Research Infrastructure Assessment and Recommendations
- Convened subcommittees to address shared research infrastructure needs, gaps and priorities in the areas of:
 - Research space
 - Core equipment
 - Computing, IT capacity and statistical support
 - Research support staff in the academic and central unitsSubcommittees are providing monthly updates during the ADR meetings and will submit reports spring 2019.

Associate Dean for Research – College of Human Sciences

1. External Funding
- Extramural research funding in the College of Human Sciences has risen steadily during the past six years, increasing from $5 million to over $10 million.
 - Grantsmanship supports provided by the ADR have included course buyouts, summer support, and graduate assistants to facilitate proposal preparation.
 - Presubmission reviews and funds to support tasks associated with well-scored proposals are provided to increase funding likelihood (one faculty member who used this support in 2017 was subsequently successful in obtaining funding for an NIH R15 in 2018).
 - Regular meetings held with the CHS Research Advisory Committee facilitate good communication and addressing research support needs in the college.

- ADR works with the Center for Health Ecology and Equity Research and the Health Disparities Research cluster to foster collaborations among CHS faculty and between CHS faculty and researchers across Auburn University.

2. Research Visibility, Networking, and Leadership

- Developed a CHS "Cool Research" video that has been used to promote awareness of diverse, exciting research being conducted by human scientists http://www.humsci.auburn.edu/research/human_scientist.php
- Co-led development of the Health Disparities Research Cluster proposal and assisted with searches for hiring new faculty affiliated with this cluster. Continue to work with the cluster leader to promote synergy and collaboration among cluster members.
- Chaired the university-wide faculty and student research symposia steering committee from 2013-2017 and continue to serve on the committee as past chair.
- In February 2018, coordinated and co-sponsored an Emergenetics leadership training for a diverse group of 28 AU administrators across the university (associate deans for research, department heads, center directors, division directors, and others in leadership positions).
- Chair of the ADRs (2017-2018). Assisted with planning ADR and other research related meetings, served on committees, led activities that helped improve policies and practices that affect research, and facilitated the ADRs' review of the 101 PAIR proposals.
- Initial point of contact for the AU Health Sciences Research Initiative (AUHSRI) steering committee. Facilitated steering committee meetings and encouraged subgroup activities that produced the AUHSRI vision/guiding principles, AUHSRI leadership vision, AUHSRI advisory councils/board member suggestions; and development of a document that summarizes health sciences research currently in process across the AU campus.

3. Graduate Student Support/Development

- CHS Graduate Student Research symposium (2017 and 2018). This symposium has had approximately 30 student presentations each year that have permitted faculty and students across the college to learn about their colleagues' research and gain a greater appreciation of the diversity and quality of human sciences research. Some of the CHS symposium award winners have gone on to win awards at the AU student symposium and the 3MT competition.
- Professional development sessions offered for graduate students each semester that focus on a range of topics including: developing job application materials (CV, cover letter, teaching and research statements); interviewing for academic positions; e-portfolios; grantsmanship; and using PIVOT.
- Recruitment and dissertation support provided by the ADR (funding for campus visits of prospective graduate students, college fellowships for top incoming students, defraying dissertation costs, and supporting travel for presenting at professional conferences).
- CHS Undergraduate Research Fellowship program - ADR annually secures sponsorship of CHS undergraduate research fellows and their mentors.

4. Human Sciences Extension (HSE)

- Continued support of the ACES-CHS partnership that comprises the HSE.
- Work closely with the Associate Director of Extension to provide leadership for HSE.
- Assisted with critical changes in the structure and focus of HSE.
- Co-developed a vision for linking HSE with the AUHSRI and facilitating engagement of HSE with the AUHSRI.

Teaching

1. Courses Taught at Auburn University

Relationship Development and Processes in Adulthood (graduate). Graduate students examine different aspects of intimate adult relationships in areas such as: theory and methodology, attraction, attachment, love and intimacy, trust and commitment, communication and conflict, intimate partner violence, infidelity, relationship dissolution, and forgiveness. Students learn to carefully dissect empirical articles determining purpose, framework, methods, key findings, limitations, and links to the broader literature. They also look across the adult relationship literature to identify key themes of relationship development during adolescence and adulthood.

Families and Social Policy (graduate and undergraduate). Undergraduate and graduate level courses facilitate students' understanding of families and policy making. Students discuss the impact of government policy on family life and how the current state of families has implications for family policy. Special attention is paid to how policy affects disadvantaged groups in American society. The course format is designed to facilitate interaction between all class participants and to provide students with the opportunity to take responsibility for determining the nature of their class projects. When appropriate, student projects are presented to legislators or shared with the media. As of Spring 2010, the policy class became a combined graduate/undergraduate course (HDFS 5300/6300). Course structure and assignments have been modified to fit a more diverse student audience.

Adolescence and Early Adult Development (undergraduate). This course addresses adolescent development within important social contexts. Students taking this course learn about changes that occur to the individual during adolescence within the environments of family, school, peer groups, and culture. Emphasis is placed on factors that promote healthy adolescent development. Students review and apply empirical studies and research-based programs that address adolescent development to several class projects. Smaller projects across the semester integrate into a collaborative project that focuses on individual and relational processes during adolescence.

2. Courses taught at the University of North Carolina Greensboro

Adolescent Development in the Family (undergraduate). This course covers the social contexts in which adolescents develop, with a special emphasis on the family context and parent-adolescent relationships. In addition to reading the course text, students review empirical research and apply research-based knowledge to the critique of popular press information about adolescents and their relationships with their parents and peers.

Family Resource Management (undergraduate). In this course, students address many aspects of family life that require the management of resources. How family processes affect the management of time, human energy, money, love, technology, and other valued resources are examined using an ecosystems perspective.

Family Observation and Assessment (undergraduate). This advanced undergraduate course is designed to increase students' understanding and application of family assessment techniques used by social science researchers. Students learn three main approaches to family assessment: survey, interview, and observation. Student groups use a multi-method approach that incorporates all three approaches to assess a particular area of functioning in a volunteer family. The data collected are used by students to construct a family assessment report.

Current Research and Theory on the Family (graduate). This course places emphasis on analyzing and synthesizing current research on families in a broad range of areas. Theory, ranging from grand theory to mid-range models applied to family processes and outcomes are examined within the research content areas to which they are commonly applied. Round table discussions and peer critiques of students' work are two processes used to promote student-directed learning in the classroom.

Work and Family Linkages (graduate and undergraduate) This course focuses on the interface between work and family domains. The course is divided into three main sections: theories of the work-family interface, research on the work-family interface, and work-family policies. Factors affecting the work-family interface, such as gender, race, and SES are discussed throughout the course. Students work in pairs to evaluate existing work-family policies within selected areas.

Identity and Relationship Development in Early Adulthood (graduate). This graduate level course provides students with an in-depth look at theory and research methods applied to the study of identity and relationship development in early adulthood. Course objectives include facilitating students' awareness of: psychosocial identity formation in late adolescence, processes underlying the development of romantic relationships in early adulthood, and how identity formation processes operate within close relationship contexts. Students also develop and apply a research protocol that can be used to collect quantitative and qualitative data relevant to identity and relationship development in early adulthood.

4. Other Contributions to Teaching

4a. Graduate Student Professional Development Seminars for the College of Human Sciences. These professional development seminars are designed to strengthen and complement the professional development of graduate students occurring in the CHS departments. Topics addressed in the seminars include: Developing a strong Curriculum Vitae and Cover Letter; Grantsmanship Basics; Teaching and Research Statements; E-Portfolios; Effective Collaboration; Tips for Being Successful during Graduate School; Interviewing; using PIVOT.

4b. Family Impact Seminars. Training at the University of Wisconsin-Madison in conducting Family Impact Seminars (FIS; a nonpartisan, educational effort to facilitate communication between researchers and policymakers). Subsequently, students in the graduate and undergraduate policy classes were engaged in a range of FIS-related activities.

4c. Social Policy Conferences. Held by the National Council on Family Relations in Washington DC. These conferences provided tools and experiences for communicating with policy makers. Used these tools with Auburn graduate students who presented Alabama representatives with two policy briefs, addressing healthcare and education, developed by student teams in the social policy class.

4d. CHS@AU in Italy. This study abroad program promotes students' application of knowledge from the fields of nutrition, hospitality, clothing/textile design, and human development and family studies. Assignments included: a personal account that documented individual student growth during the course of the program; assignment of weekly travel blogs that documented ongoing experiences; a group project that resulted in a presentation of "Italy in Pictures" to capture highlights and significance of places visited; an integrated group paper that addressed food and hospitality, fashion and product design, and families/communities across Italy. Comparisons were made between Italy's northern and southern regions and between Italy and the U.S.

4e. Mentoring: I have supervised research and outreach internships and independent studies for over 200 undergraduate students and over 50 graduate students. I have served as major professor for 25 graduate students, directed two undergraduate honor's theses, and served as the mentor for a 2004-2005 undergraduate research fellow. Through mentoring relationships, students learn a range of research skills, including: critical literature review, conceptualization of research questions, data collection (questionnaire, observational, and interview data), data entry, quantitative coding of audio taped and videotaped data, qualitative coding of interview transcripts, statistical analysis of quantitative data, and dissemination of research findings through presentations and manuscripts. Those doing applied work are trained in several youth development programs (i.e., Promoting Alabama Youth Development; Relationship Smarts Plus; Stay Connected; Bridging the Great Divide) and serve as facilitators of these programs in Alabama high schools and community groups.

4f. Auburn University Student Campaign to End World Hunger: Early in Auburn University's involvement in the student campaign, I incorporated relevant activities into both my undergraduate and graduate Families and Social Policy courses. Undergraduate students facilitated a 19 cents a day, pay it forward initiative. Each student found 19 people to donate 19 cents to the campaign and asked each of these 19 people to find 19 more (and so on). These students also wrote a statement that was read into the Alabama Congressional Record. Other undergraduate students created public service announcements that serve to educate other students about world and domestic hunger and encourage their involvement in the solution. Graduate students wrote an Op-Ed piece addressing world and domestic hunger that was published in the Montgomery Advertiser (June 15, 2005). Graduate students also developed informational summaries on domestic hunger for posting on Auburn's hunger website. Graduate and undergraduate students developed educational activities and community service ideas to engage younger youth in the War on Hunger (WOH). These resources were compiled into a 2008 4-H WOH Facilitator's Guide. The World Food Programme posted some of the educational activities we developed on Alabama on their website.

4g. Faculty Seminar on Exemplary Teaching. Received special training at the North Carolina Center for Advancement of Teaching (NCCAT), Cullowhee, NC. This special training emphasized the merits of collaborative learning practices. Materials for establishing collaborative learning practices, and methods for using these materials were shared with participants.

7. Electronic products: web sites and videos

Hunger Educational Activities posted on the World Food Programme website: <http://www.wfp.org/students-and-teachers>. Multiple activities developed and submitted for posting on the Students and Teachers page of the World Food Programme website (ongoing project).

IDCR Website Co-developer (<http://www.auburn.edu/humsci/IDRC>). Site for the Identity Development and Close Relationships Research Lab is under development. It will contain sections addressing the Healthy Couples, Healthy Children: Targeting Youth project; the Young Adult Experiences project; the Attachment-Identity project; and the Identity Processing Style Q-sort.

Adolescents and Families Extension Web Site Developer (<http://www.aces.edu/teens/>). The site was established January, 2001 and houses four areas: Parent-Teen Relationships, Youth Development, Principles of Parenting, and 4H Train the Trainer. Each area contains pages that offer information for Extension Agents, Educators, Parents, and Teens.

Stay Connected Video Series. A series of 15 public service announcement (PSA) videos were developed as part of the Stay Connected project for the United States Department of Defense (DoD) Healthy Parenting Initiative. These videos are available in VHS, DVD and web formats. The videos can be viewed on the web at: www.aces.edu/teens/parenteen/video. These PSA videos have been incorporated into a broad range of parenting and youth programs offered through ACES and the Human Development and Family Studies Department, as well as by DoD, and parent and family educators in other states.
