- Diverse issues raised by professors emeriti in Summer/Fall 2014
- Auburn's Emeritus Status Policy (Handbook: 3.10.3) is vague and does not specifically address many of the issues
- Most universities, especially peer institutions, have emeritus policies similar in wording to Auburn's

Senate Report on Emeriti Issues

- In general, Auburn (like many universities) prefers concerns to be handled within the department, school or college, as they will be attuned to the particular needs of its professors emeriti (Handbook 3.10.3.7.)

Senate Report on Emeriti Issues

- Some issues still are uncertain:
 - “Emeriti may lose MEDEX coverage even when representing AU abroad”

Senate Report on Emeriti Issues

- In general:
 - It is as impossible to address “who does what, why and how” for professors emeriti as it is for actively employed professors; both have varying relationships to the many aspects of the university, all of which engage different channels of communication.

 - Most issues can be resolved locally (department, school or college); if not, then the Committee on Faculty Salaries and Welfare or the University Senate can look into them

Senate Report on Emeriti Issues

- In general:
 - Unclear web information and out-of-date lists can often be updated or clarified immediately
